What’s Up?

OCTOBER 2017

DARK DAYS OF PLUMMETING TiO2 PRICES SEEM TO BE BEHIND US

The question is how long will this cycle last?

In this issue, TiPMC takes a deep dive into the details included in our proprietary TiO2 HeatMap as markets continue to surge throughout the world – with the exception of China. There, the government is inhibiting growth by enforcing environmental regulations and implementing measures to slow down the boom in real estate. That’s limited Chinese disruption in TiO2 markets worldwide.

Multinational Producers (MNP) continue to raise prices every quarter – and it looks like that will continue into next year. To see the data, the interpretations and the perspectives, access the October issue of Ti Observer – Insights for Analysts. In November, we’ll be sharing analyses and interpretation of data concerning how long the up market may last for both mineral sands and TiO2 producers. We’ll provide the forward-looking indicators for both as well as our insights based on long experience in the industry.

We’ll also be probing the growth of TiO2 markets in Asia – once a stronghold for Chinese manufacturers. Now MNPs are capturing more market share following increases in the standards of living in many Asian countries. With rising incomes, consumers want quality TiO2 products, particularly durables and plastics.
